My thoughts from Health, Assessment and Education Sectors.
University of Cambridge, UEA, NHS

Women's experience of work is diifferent to men's.

Women are bitchy and, bullying is rife, many capable managers are held back by seniors.
There are no extras, no petrol, no house perks or expense claims.
Many younger women resort to bullying or flirting to get promotion.
Many with children struggle with childcare.

Men are spoilt with extras like hotels, cooked meals and petrol allowances.
The security of full time work, high salaries with little or no education makes british men arrogant and conceited.
They hire and fire women, refuse to employ over 40s, have office affairs and stalk others.
Other men are supportive of their poor conduct involving fraud, violence or misconduct

It is womens lack of security in work that causes the greatest poverty and inequality.
Improved contracts, no zero hours, affordable childcare with flexible hours are the way forward.

Best regards
