Memorandum to the Business, Innovation and Skills Committee on Post Legislative Assessment of the Legislative and Regulatory Reform Act 2006

Introduction

1. This memorandum provides a preliminary assessment of the Legislative and Regulatory Reform Act 2006 and has been prepared by the Department for Business, Innovation and Skills for submission to the following committees: the Business, Innovation and Skills Select Committee; the Regulatory Reform Committee and the Delegated Powers and Regulatory Reform Committee, in accordance with Chapter 41 of the 'Cabinet Office Guide to Making Legislation' published July 2014¹
2. The Legislative and Regulatory Reform Act 2006 (the Act) replaced the Regulatory Reform Act 2001 and was in response to a review of the operation of the 2001 Act, and recommendations made by the Better Regulation Task Force in their report 'Less is More: Reducing Burdens, Improving Outcomes' published in 2005.
3. The overall aim of the Act is to remove or reduce burdens from legislation, promote regulatory principles, make provision about the exercise of regulatory functions and make provision about the interpretation of legislation relating to the European Communities and European Economic Area.
4. There are three main Parts to the Act. Part 1 provides powers to make orders to remove or reduce burdens from legislation. Part 2 provides power to promote regulatory principles and is intended to promote more effective inspections and enforcement by regulators and ensure that they exercise their functions in a way that is consistent and proportionate. It sets out statutory principles which inform the Regulators Code.
5. Part 3 provides provision for domestic legislation which refers to Community instruments such as directives or regulations. This section is designed to make the drafting of domestic instruments simpler.²
6. Part 1 of the Act works by allowing changes to primary legislation to be made by a special type of statutory instrument called a Legislative Reform Order (LRO). LROs may only be used to remove or reduce a burden arising from legislation. The proposed change must be subject to consultation and an Explanatory Memorandum prepared by the Department responsible for the Order. Under Parliamentary Standing Orders, LROs are scrutinised by two Parliamentary Committees - the Regulatory Reform Committee and the Delegated Powers and Regulatory Reform Committee - to ensure that the proposed LRO meets the criteria set out in the Act.

7. The Committees also consider the procedure (negative, affirmative or super-affirmative) that is being recommended by the Department for the scrutiny of the LRO; assess its appropriateness; and either accept the proposed procedure or recommend that a more lengthy procedure is applied, which is binding. The Committees' assessments of the LRO are published after 40 or 60 days depending on the scrutiny process used, the LRO is then – again dependent on the process used:
 - a. Laid and made if not prayed against
 - b. Debated in Parliament followed by a motion to agree
 - c. Amended in line with the Committees' comments, with a final draft being submitted for further consideration by the Committees, followed by their recommendation, a debate and motion to agree.

8. A LRO has to meet six criteria to be deemed suitable, which are set out in the legislation. The LRO is scrutinised against these criteria by each of the Committees. The DPRCC also looks to ensure that delegated powers are being correctly applied. The six criteria are that:
 - (a) the policy objective intended to be secured by the provision could not be satisfactorily secured by non-legislative means; .
 - (b) the effect of the provision is proportionate to the policy objective; .
 - (c) the provision, taken as a whole, strikes a fair balance between the public interest and the interests of any person adversely affected by it; .
 - (d) the provision does not remove any necessary protection; .
 - (e) the provision does not prevent any person from continuing to exercise any right or freedom which that person might reasonably expect to continue to exercise; and
 - (f) the provision is not of constitutional significance

9. The Act provides three scrutiny procedural options to allow the scrutiny to be tailored to the content and complexity of the LRO. During the scrutiny period the Committees may seek further information from the department or take expert advice.

10. Where an Order is laid under the negative procedure the Committee have 40 days to consider if it meets the criteria set out in the LRA and is suitable. Within the first 30 of those 40 days, the Committees can recommend that a more rigorous procedure is followed. At the end of the 40 days the Committees set out their reasons for approving or not approving the LRO and where applicable recommending an enhanced scrutiny process. If approved the LRO is laid in Parliament and will come into force if it is not prayed against.

11. An Order laid under an affirmative procedure follows the same route, but will then be debated in both Houses, followed by a motion to approve the order.
12. An Order laid under a super affirmative procedure takes 60 days. After 60 days the Committees report their findings and state either that :
 - The LRO should be laid before the house for final scrutiny
 - The LRO is amended before it is laid in draft before parliament or
 - That the LRO should not be proceeded with.

Summary of the Objectives of the Act

13. The objectives of the Act are to make provision:
 - for removing or reducing burdens from legislation and promote regulatory principles;
 - about the exercise of regulatory functions;
 - about the interpretation of legislation relating to the European Communities and the European Economic Area; to make provision relating to section 2(2) of the European Communities Act 1972³.
14. The Act extends to the whole of the UK, but Orders may not make provisions within the Scottish Parliament or repeal or amend any Northern Ireland legislation. An Order cannot make any provision on conferring, modifying or removing a function of the Welsh Assembly except with the agreement of the Welsh Assembly.

From the Explanatory Notes to the Legislative and Regulatory Reform Act⁴

15. The Act contains three parts. Part 1, Section 1 of the Act confers power on a Minister of the Crown to make any provision by Order to remove or reduce a burden to which any person is subject as a direct or indirect result of any legislation. A burden is defined as a financial cost, an administrative inconvenience, an obstacle to efficiency, productivity or profitability or a sanction which affect the carrying on of any lawful activity.
16. Section 2 provides power to promote regulatory principles. A minister of the Crown may make an order to ensure that regulatory functions are exercised to comply with principles of good regulation. These are that regulatory activities should be carried out in a way that is transparent, accountable, proportionate, consistent and targeted only at cases in which action is needed.

17. Part 2 of the Act, covers regulators and the exercise of regulatory functions. Regulatory activities must be carried out in a way which is transparent, accountable, proportionate and consistent. They should be targeted at cases in which they are needed. Section 22 enables a Minister of the Crown to issue and revise a Code of Practice relating to the exercise of regulatory functions. A regulatory Code of Practice was first issued in 2008 and was revised in 2014.
18. Part 3, section 25 makes provision about domestic legislation which refers to EEC (EU) regulations and directives. It is designed to make drafting of domestic regulations simpler. Section 27 enables the power under European Communities Act 1972 to be exercised when making and order, rules or a scheme. Section 28 provides a power to make ambulatory references to Community Instruments

Implementation of the Act

19. The Act received Royal Assent on 8 November 2006 and came into force on the 8 January 2007, replacing the Regulatory Reform Act 2001. The first Legislative Reform Order (LRO) was made on 17 November 2008. All the provisions were brought into effect at commencement.

Secondary legislation and guidance

20. A table listing the secondary legislation made under the Act is in Annex A. To date 23 LROs have been made, and one is currently in Parliament. Annex B contains a list of the Legislative Reform Orders that have been made and provides details of the Order, including quantified savings from Impact Assessments (IAs) where they have been provided, the Act(s) they amended and the department that laid them.
21. The Act was accompanied by a detailed explanatory note and guidance was issued to help officials assess if the measure they are proposing is suitable for an LRO, and take them through the steps of the LRO process. The original guidance was revised, shortened and reissued in January 2013, and a quick start guide was produced to help provide an overview of the process.⁵
22. The Local Better Regulation Office published a guide on the differences between the Regulators Compliance Code and the voluntary Enforcement Concordat in March 2008⁶ to help Local Authorities.
23. The Better Regulation Delivery Office has produced a range of resources and tools to support regulators with the new Regulators code. Including Frequently Asked Questions and a tool kit to help them meet the transparency requirements.⁷

Legal Issues

24. No legal issues have arisen with the Legislative and Regulatory Reform Act 2006.
25. There were however concerns with the initial draft bill. The House of Commons Select Committee on Regulatory Reform, the House of Lords Constitution Committee and the House of Lords Delegated Powers and Regulatory Reform Committee, raised concerns about the initial drafting of the Legislative and Regulatory Reform Bill. These concerns were reported in the media. In particular, the powers to amend and repeal legislation were held to be too wide and not sufficiently well defined, with further concerns about the potential use of the proposed powers to amend the Bill/Act itself and other constitutional Acts.
26. In response to this the Government amended Bill.
- The order-making power in Part 1 was restricted and focused on better regulation to ensure that under the Act a Minister may only amend legislation which removes or reduces a burden or which brings regulatory activity in line with better regulation principles (These principles are that inspection should be transparent, accountable, proportionate, consistent and targeted where action is needed).
 - Section 3 sets out a number of conditions that an order has to meet and 2 (f) in Section 3 prevents an order being used for amendments of constitutional significance.
 - A statutory veto over orders was given to the relevant Committees of either House of Parliament allowing them to recommend that an order not be made, although this could be overturned on the floor of the house. There were discussions on defining criteria for when the veto could be used, but these were not imposed.
27. There continued to be concerns that the Act would be used for controversial measures. To allay these concerns the government of the day gave two non-statutory undertakings:
- Orders will not be used to implement highly controversial reforms
 - that they will not be forced through the Committees of this House⁸
28. To address concerns about amendments to the Act being made by an order under the Act, the order-making power was restricted, and cannot be used to amend Part 1 of the Act itself or the Human Rights Act 1998.

Reviews Touching on the LRRRA 2006

29. There have been no formal reviews of the LRRRA 2006 section 1.

⁸ Hansard 9 Feb 2006: Column 2058-9 <http://www.parliament.the-stationery-office.co.uk/pa/cm200506/cmhansrd/vo060209/debtext/60209-20.htm>

30. The Delegated Powers and Regulatory Reform Committee did however refer to the LRRRA 2006 in their ‘Special Report: Strengthened Statutory Procedures for the Scrutiny of Delegated Powers’⁹ published on 12 June 2012. This looked at the use of delegated powers in different pieces of legislation including the LRRRA 2006. Overall the Committee welcomed

‘ the existing statutory procedures described in this Special Report in that they provide Parliament with an enhanced role’

The Regulators Compliance Code

31. Section 22 of Part 2 of the LRRRA 2006 makes provision for a statutory code of practice concerning the exercise of regulatory functions. A code entitled the Regulators Compliance Code (RCC) was first published in 2008 in accordance with this provision. The RCC governs approaches to enforcement by non-economic regulators. Its role is to guide regulators’ policy and behaviour to ensure that they follow the principles of good regulation.

32. The 2012 post implementation review of the RCC¹⁰ found that the principles of the Code were sound and that they had been largely adopted by regulators with many instances of good regulatory delivery. However, the review found that delivery against the provisions of the Code was inconsistent and it had not delivered its objectives to embed a change in regulatory culture and practice.

33. The Government consulted in 2013 on a revised Code, entitled the Regulators’ Code which provides a framework that can address the issues identified, promoting transparency and accountability and ensuring that regulatory enforcement is properly focused on supporting business compliance and growth. The revised Regulators’ Code came into statutory force in April 2014.¹¹

Preliminary assessment of the Act

Part 1 – Legislative and Regulatory Reform Orders

34. The main aims of the Part 1 of the Act are to remove or reduce burdens from legislation and promote regulatory principles.

35. A burden is defined in the Act (1 (3)) as a financial cost, an administrative cost, an obstacle to efficiency or productivity or a sanction which affects the carrying on of any lawful activity. This is a broader definition than in the predecessor 2001 Act¹².

¹⁰ <https://www.gov.uk/government/consultations/amending-the-regulators-compliance-code>

¹¹ <https://www.gov.uk/government/publications/regulators-code>

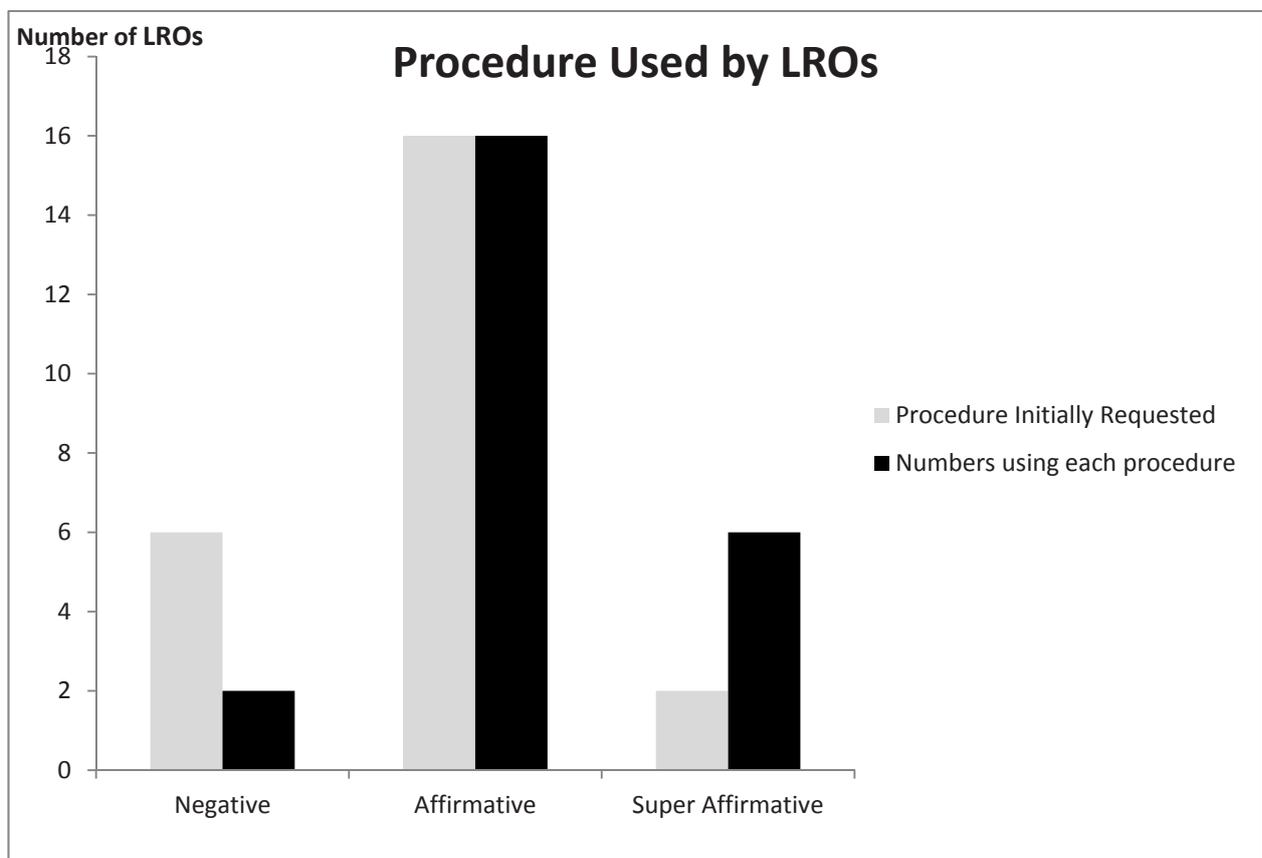

¹² <http://www.legislation.gov.uk/ukpga/2001/6/contents>

36. Questions around proving that a measure removes an administrative or a financial burden that impacts on business have not been raised by policy officials. The Committees reports on LROs have not highlighted any concerns that measures being put forward are not removing a burden.
37. There have to date been 24 Orders made under Part 1 of the Act covering a wide range of subject areas. 13 have removed a burden on business and 11 have removed an administrative burden.
38. Individual savings achieved in terms of reducing a financial cost range from £0.45m for changes to the Veterinary Surgeon's Act to £208m for the changes to the Insolvency Act, indicating that LROs have been used to both deliver major changes and smaller but still significant ones. The savings have been calculated under different Impact Assessment methodologies and costed over different periods so it is not possible to aggregate them and give an overall figure. The figures, where available are listed in Annex B.
39. A number of LROs have also produced administrative changes which cannot often be quantified. The Clinical Commissioning Group LRO estimated savings of £17m in administrative changes, while changes to Overseas Registration of Births and Deaths and the Annual Review of Local Authorities also identified administrative changes but did not provide an estimate of savings.
40. Under the Regulatory Reform Act 2001, 28 Regulatory Reform Orders were made but the savings were not quantified. The Impact Assessment for the Legislative and Regulatory Reform Bill did not quantify the expected savings. Substantial savings were expected from the implementation of Departmental Simplification Plans, and it was envisaged that some of these measures would be delivered by LROs.
41. The IA for the Bill also envisaged that LROs would be easier and hence more frequently used than RROs. Between 2001 and 2006, 28 RROs were made compared to 24 LROs being made between 2007 and 2014. The initial post legislative review due in 2012 of the LRA 2006 was delayed in part because of the small number of LROs at that point on which to draw evidence.
42. Take up of LROs has not been as high as might have been expected. Taking an LRO through Parliament is resource intensive and it is easier to rely on being part of a wider Bill team to deliver deregulatory measures through a Bill, where that option is available.
43. There have been a number of deregulatory Bills in this parliament, including the Enterprise and Regulatory Reform Act 2013, the Deregulation Bill, the Infrastructure Bill and the Small Business, and Enterprise and Employment Bill. These contain measures that could have been delivered through Legislative Reform Orders. Some measures which started as Legislative Reform Orders are now going through as part of the Deregulation Bill e.g. changes to Satellite Insurance. The Act has none the less been useful for measures that needed to be delivered but were unable to be included in a bill and it has delivered a number of significant deregulatory reforms in terms of value.
44. The majority of LROs laid by departments have been successful. The main area where the Committees have not been satisfied that departments have met the requirements and have required further evidence has been around the removal of protection and, more rarely the exercise of a right of freedom. In these cases the Committees have usually increased the scrutiny procedure to super affirmative and requested more information or amendments from the Department laying the LRO. In all cases but one the Departments have managed to address the Committees' concerns and make the LRO.

Scrutiny Procedures

- 45. The three scrutiny procedures resulted from a particular amendment to the LRRRA to allow the scrutiny procedure to be tailored to the complexity of the change being proposed. The RRA 2001 only had a super affirmative procedure, which the Government believed was disproportionate for small technical changes. The scrutiny procedures differ in the amount of time that each is considered for by the committees, and if they then need to be debated.
- 46. Either Committee can independently recommend that a more stringent procedure is used, but not a lesser one. The Committees do not need to be in agreement, and it is the higher scrutiny procedure that will then apply.
- 47. The table on the next page shows the numbers of LROs going through each procedure and which procedure they were laid under.

48. From the graph it can be seen that relatively few measures go through under the negative procedure, despite one in four being laid as such, while the majority will go under an affirmative procedure. Very few measures are laid under super affirmative route, but after consideration by the Committees; one in four eventually uses this route.
49. The Committees restrict the use of the negative route for technical and minor changes. Only two have been successful in using this route, the Parish Payments LRO and the Animal Health LRO.
50. The Committees' usual reason for increasing the scrutiny procedure is because an Order involves a policy change, rather than just a technical amendment, and should therefore be debated.
51. There have also been some occasions where the Committees have accepted that a measure is minor and technical but have increased the scrutiny procedure to enable a debate to take place. This tends to occur where the Committees believe the area is of wider parliamentary interest or is contentious.¹³ Measures connected with licensing such as the Reform (Licensing) (Interim Authority Notices) Order 2010¹⁴ are also likely to have their scrutiny increased.
52. Most LROs laid under the negative procedure have had their scrutiny procedure increased to the affirmative one. One was however increased to super affirmative, because of concerns around removal of protections.
53. The majority of LROs as already stated are laid under the affirmative procedure. The Committees increased the scrutiny of 3 LROs laid under the affirmative procedure to super affirmative. This was either to allow amendments to be made, or to allow longer time and consideration for the measure.
54. Reviewing the recommendations on scrutiny procedure reveals that one third of LROs (i.e. 8) had their scrutiny procedure increased. In half of these cases it was by both committees, for the remaining measures it tended to be mainly the Delegated Powers and Regulatory Reform Committee that increased the procedure. The reasons given for increasing the procedure from negative to affirmative were mainly because of the subject of the LRO, or because it was a policy change and not just a technical amendment, or impacted on a large number of people.
55. Overall the provision of three scrutiny procedures, rather than the single super affirmative procedure has been beneficial in that it has allowed most LROs to go through as affirmative rather than super affirmative route. This means it that scrutiny is more proportionate and tailored to the measure and allows a quicker route through parliament than under the previous RRO regime, although relatively few measures have so far used the negative procedure.

Consultation Requirement

56. To make an LRO a consultation has to be carried out along the lines of Part 1 (13) of the LRR set out below

1) If a Minister proposes to make an Order under this Part he must —

(a) consult such organisations as appear to him to be representative of interests substantially affected by the proposals; .

(b) where the proposals relate to the functions of one or more statutory bodies, consult those bodies, or persons appearing to him to be representative of those bodies; .

(c) consult the Welsh Ministers where the proposals, so far as applying in or as regards Wales, relate to any matters in relation to which the Welsh Ministers, the First Minister for Wales or the Counsel General to the Welsh Assembly Government exercise functions (and where the agreement of the Welsh Ministers is not required under section 11)] .

(d) in such cases as he considers appropriate, consult the Law Commission, the Scottish Law Commission or the Northern Ireland Law Commission; and .

(e) consult such other persons as he considers appropriate.

57. The consultation process is a key part of making an LRO. It allows the relevant Department to demonstrate that there is support and acceptance of what they propose, and the Committees to assure themselves of this. The consultation is used as a basis for gathering information to show that the criteria listed in Section 13 are being met.

58. The consultation process is usually seen as fairly straightforward. It is something that the Committees look at closely and in two instances they have raised the adequacy of the consultation. For instance, the DPRRC challenged the openness of the Epping Forest LRO, consultation.

59. The consultation is a useful process in showing how controversial a measure is, and two LROs (on Street Works and Professional Qualifications) were not taken forward because the consultation responses revealed polarised opinions on the proposed measures.¹⁵

Use of the Veto

60. Sections 16 (4-5), 17 (4-5) and 18 (4-5) give the Committees the power to recommend that ‘the Minister not make an order in terms of the draft Order’ The Minister may not then make an order unless the recommendation is rejected by resolution in the relevant House of Parliament. The veto has only been used once, by the DPRRC for the Regulation of Providers of Social Work Services¹⁶, which was withdrawn.

Amendments to Legislation under 2 years old

61. The LRA (2006) also change the approach from the RRA(2001) by allowing amendments to Acts that are less than 2 years old, but this has not been greatly used. The table in Appendix B lists Acts that LROs have or are seeking to amend. A majority of amendments were to Acts from the 60s, 70s, 80s and the 2000s. The Clinical Commissioning Group LRO¹⁷ however, which amended the National Health Service Act 2006, aimed to correct a minor oversight in the changes made by the Health and Social Care Act 2012.

Timing

62. LROs are not generally considered by Departments as a quick route. Once they are laid in Parliament, the timeline is fairly clear, though parliamentary recesses can increase the time taken. Delays tend to occur at the point of analysis of consultation responses, dealing with issues identified in the consultation and drafting the impact assessment and legislative reform order. Having three potential scrutiny routes instead of just one super affirmative route has however made it quicker to get a negative or affirmative LRO through parliament.

63. The Better Regulation Executive provides updates to the Committees of upcoming LROs but does not track how long they take from start to finish. Anecdotal evidence from policy teams report that delays tend to arise because of pressures on policy, economic or legal resources. Often LROs are used for important but not high priority measures and so it becomes difficult getting access to particularly legal and economic resources in the face of other higher priority policies.

64. Delays can also be caused by the analysis of consultation responses, particularly if the number of responses is unexpectedly large such as in the case of the Parish Payments LRO¹⁸, or where they are complex and need to incorporate data such as the proposed Outer Space LRO¹⁹. In other cases the consultation responses or legal drafting has identified problems that need to be addressed, which if they involve legislation or responsibilities in another Department have not been easy to resolve. In a few guidance needed to be redrafted and this delayed the process.

65. Theoretical timings suggest that it should be possible to complete a LRO within nine months, but only a few have managed to do this. For most it will take eighteen months or longer.

66. The Better Regulation Executive is responsible for the guidance on LROs and provides support to policy officials including seminars and promotion events. It has made the guidance simpler and provided a quick start guide to make it easier to understand the LRO process and encourage their use.
67. LROs tend to be used as a last resort, when a measure needs to be brought in, but there are no Bills that it could fit into. Evidence from policy teams is that LROs work well when the team is properly resourced with access to legal and analytical support.

Part 2 – Regulators – Exercise of regulatory functions

68. Section 22 of the LRA 2006 makes provision for a Minister of the Crown to issue, and from time to time revise, a code of practice in relation to the exercise of regulatory functions. The Regulators' Compliance Code (RCC) came into statutory force in 2008 and established a regulatory framework to guide regulators' policy and behaviours to ensure that they follow the principles of good regulation. The Code drew upon the recommendations of the Hampton Review which had examined, in 2004-5, progress towards improving approaches to regulatory inspection and enforcement. The RCC included provisions in relation to:

- The impact of regulatory interventions on economic progress;
- Risk-based allocation of resources and regulatory activities;
- Provision of regulatory advice and guidance;
- The use and conduct of inspections;
- Information requirements;
- Compliance and enforcement actions; and
- Ensuring accountability.

69. A public consultation carried out in 2011 as part of the Government's Transforming Regulatory Enforcement strategy²⁰ included two questions about the RCC. Findings indicated that the profile of the Code was low, particularly amongst businesses, and that it lacked the power to transform the way in which regulation was delivered. In the light of these results, the Government committed to carrying out a post implementation review of the RCC to examine its potential to improve the transparency of regulators, and their accountability to businesses.

70. The 2012 post implementation review of the RCC identified many instances of good regulatory delivery and found that regulators had largely adopted the principles set out in the Code. However, less progress had been made in delivering against certain of these principles and, overall, the RCC had not delivered its objectives to embed a change in regulatory culture and practice. The

Government undertook a further public consultation 'Amending the Regulators' Compliance Code'²¹, proposing an updated Code entitled the Regulators Code (RC). Following widespread consultation, the revised code came into statutory force in April 2014.

71. The RC has retained much of the content of the RRC in terms of providing a framework which supports good regulatory delivery, in accordance with the statutory principles established by the LRA 2006. However, it has a greater emphasis than its predecessor on promoting a constructive two-way dialogue between regulators and those that they regulate, and on promoting transparency and accountability.
72. The Government is committed to making sure the Regulators Code is effective and has put in place a programme to raise the profile of the Code amongst regulators, businesses and others with an interest in this area. Support is being provided to the regulators to assist them in responding to the expectations set out in the Code. It is the Government's intention to monitor the Code's implementation and application, providing guidance where necessary.

Part 3 – Legislation Relating to the European Communities etc.

73. Part 3 of the Legislative and Regulatory Reform Act 2006 includes provisions addressing a number of issues connected with legislation concerning the European Union. In particular, section 25 makes the drafting of provisions referring to EU instruments easier by inserting provisions into the Interpretation Act 1978 and the Scotland Act 1998. This ensures that (unless the contrary intention appears) such references cover any amendments that have already been made to that instrument at the date on which the reference is made. This avoids the need to make potentially lengthy references to other instruments amending, extending or applying the EU measure to which the legislation refers.
74. Similarly, section 28 is useful when drafting legislation implementing EU obligations, as it makes it possible to make cross references to an EU instrument that include any subsequent amendments made to relevant piece of EU legislation. This means, for example, that where the values in an EU measure in a complex and technical area are regularly updated it is not necessary to make new domestic legislation every time those values change.
75. Our searches suggest there are 323 instances of where section 28 has been cited in the pre-amble to statutory instruments. There may of course be incidences of the use of the power which was not indicated in the pre-amble to the instrument, or other scenarios, which were not captured by our search. However, this figure gives some indication of how useful the power has been.

Conclusion

76. The LRRRA 2006 has delivered significant reforms reducing administrative and financial burdens. However, it has not achieved the increase in LROs expected when it was introduced. This may in part be due to the number of general deregulatory Bills since 2006 that have been introduced which included measures that might otherwise have delivered through LROs
77. While there have been fewer opportunities for LROs than expected, the process itself seems fit for purpose and the Act has and continues to provide a useful tool for measures that are unable to be taken forward in a bill.
78. Part 2 of the Act has been effective in providing a framework which supports good regulatory delivery, in accordance with the statutory principles established by the LRRRA 2006. The Regulators' Compliance Code established a regulatory framework to guide regulators' policy and behaviours to ensure that they follow the principles of good regulation.
79. The new Regulators code has a greater emphasis on promoting a constructive two-way dialogue between regulators and those that they regulate, and on promoting transparency and accountability. Support is being provided to the regulators to assist them in responding to the expectations set out in the Code.
80. Part 3 of the Act with its provisions for addressing a number of issues connected with legislation concerning the European Union makes the drafting of provisions referring to EU instruments easier, while the figure given for the use of Section 28 provides an indication of how useful the power has been.
