29 November 2012

You asked for the Committee's advice about accepting a part-time, unpaid appointment as a Visiting Professor at the University of Edinburgh, after leaving Government in September 2012.

The Committee noted that that you had had some official dealings with the University in relation to its expertise on, and support for the development of, carbon capture and storage technologies; but that the Visiting Professorship did not involve this work.

Our advice is that we see no reason why you should not accept the appointment forthwith, subject to the condition that, for two years from your last day in office, you should not become personally involved in lobbying Government on behalf of your new employer.

It might be helpful if I add that lobbying is defined in the Business Appointment Rules in the following way: "Lobbying in this context means that the former civil servant should not engage in communication with Government - including Ministers, special advisers and officials - with a view to influencing a Government decision or policy in relation to their own interests, or the interests of the organisation by which they are employed, or to whom they are contracted".

I should be grateful if you would inform us as soon as you take up the appointment, or if it is announced that you will do so, either by returning the enclosed form or by emailing the office at the above address. We shall otherwise not be able to deal with any enquiries, since we do not release information about appointments which have not been taken up or announced. This could lead to a false assumption being made about whether you had complied with the Ministerial Code. Similarly, I should be grateful if you would inform us if you propose to extend or otherwise change your role with the University of Edinburgh as, depending on the circumstances, it may be necessary for you to seek fresh advice.

Once the appointment has been publicly announced or taken up, we will publish this letter on the Committee's website and include the main details of the application, together with the Advisory Committee's advice, in the regularly updated consolidated list on our website and in the next annual report.
