Your claim has already been carefully considered by the Home Office and it has been decided that you do not need protection and do not qualify for any leave. You have also had the opportunity to have that decision reconsidered by an independent tribunal so any further submissions should relate to new evidence that you could not have submitted previously.

There is help and support to enable you to return home through the Assisted Voluntary Return programmes and a leaflet that provides further information on eligibility as well as contact details for Refugee Action is available here:

Refugee Action – Choices Assisted Voluntary Return Service

Refugee Action help people to return to their own country. They are an independent charity and are not part of the United Kingdom Government. Through 'Choices', Refugee Action's Voluntary Assistance Return and Reintegration Programme (VARRP), you can apply for Reintegration Assistance where you can benefit from a small business start up, job training, job placements, educational courses and vocational training. Additionally Refugee Action provide a relocation grant and baggage allowance and can help with temporary accommodation and childcare. Refugee Action offer independent, confidential and non-directive advice so that you can make an informed decision about returning home. For further information see the Choices website: <http://www.choices-avr.org.uk/>

You should use this form if you need to make further submissions for asylum or humanitarian protection reasons. It is not compulsory for you to use this form but it will help you set your further submissions out effectively if you decide to make them. Using this form will also assist the Home Office to consider your further submissions by ensuring that you provide all the necessary information. All documentation relating to your claim must be submitted with this form. You should be aware that very few further submissions are successful because they do not attach the relevant information.

If you want to stay in the UK for purely for family or private life reasons you can choose to submit an application for leave to remain under the Immigration Rules using one of the FLR (FP) or FLR (M) application forms, depending on which route you want to apply for. If you want to stay for other reasons that do not relate to asylum, humanitarian protection or family or private life, you can choose to apply on an FLR (O) application form. Such applications require an application fee, but a fee waiver is available for applications on the FLR (FP) or FLR (O) raising human rights reasons to remain here, where evidence is provided that the applicant is destitute or that there are exceptional circumstances. All of these forms are available on the Home Office website: <https://www.gov.uk/visas-immigration>

All further submissions should be:

- new, not old, and significantly different from the previous material – not a repetition of your previous claim
- able to create a realistic prospect of success – new material should mean that the Home Office might realistically grant you leave to remain in the United Kingdom
- relevant to you – if you submit a country report or similar objective evidence, you must say how this relates to your claim
- not previously available – this should be the first opportunity you have had to submit the information and evidence
- submitted now, not later – if you delay submitting information, this could impact on the decision we make and any appeal rights you might have.

For further information, please see the “notes to assist completion”, at the end of this form.

Where possible, please include with this form copies of:

Tick box below to show what you are including:

Notes to assist completion

You must explain your reasons for wanting to remain in the UK which relate:

- (i) To a change in your country that relates to your claim; and / or
- (ii) To new evidence in support of your previous claim; and / or
- (iii) To a change in your personal circumstances, either in your country of claim, or in the UK.

Your reasons must contain significant new material which was not available at the time when your claim was last considered. You should not just repeat previous claims.

What the Home Office will need to see from your further submissions:

New, not old	Further submissions should be based on new material, not a repeat of a previous claim or submission, unless there has been a change in legislation, case law or policy since your last submission.
Be significant	The new material should be significant. This means that there should be enough information in the new material for there to be a realistic prospect of the Home Office or an immigration judge deciding either: <ul style="list-style-type: none">• that you should be granted asylum, humanitarian protection or discretionary leave, or• be granted leave on the basis that removal would breach your human rights or• be granted leave on the basis of compassionate circumstances.
Relevant to you	The new material must be relevant to you, and the further submissions should explain how the material is relevant to you. Copies of reports from organisations such as Amnesty International, newspapers etc are not sufficient on their own without an explanation of how they are relevant to your own case. If a report is available in the public domain, you could, for example, submit the title and date of a report and reference the part that applies to your own case. In such circumstances you would not need to submit a hard copy of the report itself.
Not previously available	Material should not have been available prior to the most recent decision on your case, whether that decision is an initial decision, an appeal or a decision on previous further submissions, unless there is a good reason why you did not submit the material earlier.
Now, not later	Further submissions must be made as soon as is reasonably practicable.

You must include the evidence you have which supports your new claim:

- Write down in the space provided the document title, page number and paragraph number to show where your evidence comes from.

- You must explain how the evidence relates to you personally. General information about the situation in your own country is not sufficient. The Home Office dedicates resources to monitoring the general situation in countries from which individuals arrive in the UK seeking asylum and is already in possession of such general information and will take it into account when considering the other material you have submitted.

Is there anything else which you have not told us?

- If you tell us now or later something which you could or should have told us earlier, or give us evidence which you could have given us earlier, we will consider whether and how your credibility is affected by your delay. Additionally, you may not be able to appeal if the application is refused, even if we find that your evidence is significant.
- If there is not enough space in the boxes, please continue on a separate sheet if necessary:
