Introduction

This leaflet provides information on the existing State Pension for people reaching State Pension age before 6 April 2016. The amounts quoted in this leaflet will apply from April 2014 and usually change every April.

Important changes to State Pension

The government is changing the State Pension from April 2016. The new State Pension will apply to:

- men born on or after 6 April 1951, and
- women born on or after 6 April 1953.

From December 2018, the government is also raising the State Pension age for both men and women, which will start to increase to reach 66 in October 2020.

Further changes will gradually increase men’s and women’s State Pension age to 67 between 2026 and 2028.

If you already get State Pension, or if you reach State Pension age before 6 April 2016, the existing rules for State Pension apply for you. This will also include if you continue to defer your pension after 6 April 2016 or start to defer it on that date. If your husband, wife or civil partner reaches State Pension age on or after 6 April 2016, their State Pension will be affected. Any State Pension you may get on the basis of your husband’s, wife’s or civil partner’s National Insurance contribution record or State Pension will be based on their National Insurance contribution record for the period up to 5 April 2016 and will not include any contributions they make after that date.

Why do I need a pension?

We’re all living longer, which is good news. To make the most of this, you need to think about how you will pay for your retirement. The best time to start preparing is today.

The State Pension is a good start but you may want to think about adding to it with a pension of your own.

It’s never too early to start saving. Even if it’s only a small amount, any money you save early in life is likely to build up over time. And the sooner you start saving, the more money you are likely to get when you retire.

Some of the things you need to think about are:

• how much you earn
• the type of job you have
• whether you work for someone else or for yourself
• how much money you think you will need when you retire, and
• how long you plan to work for.

When can I get my State Pension?

You can get your State Pension when you reach State Pension age. You don’t get your State Pension automatically. You have to claim it.

If you are already getting benefits from us, we should have enough information about you to start paying you your State Pension.

We will contact you if we need more information, or we need to talk about your options because you get certain other benefits.

You only need to contact us if you want to put off (defer) claiming your State Pension (see page 37).

Pages 10 to 14 show when you will reach State Pension age. You can also use the State Pension age calculator to work out your State Pension age.

www.gov.uk/calculate-state-pension

Your payment may not start from the exact day you reach State Pension age – there may be a few days’ gap. This is because State Pension is paid in whole weeks on a fixed ‘payday’ that depends on your National Insurance (NI) number.

You don’t have to claim your State Pension when you reach State Pension age. If you don’t need the money straight away, you could put off (defer) claiming it.

If you decide to carry on working after reaching State Pension age, you can still claim your State Pension while you’re working. Your wages and the hours you work won’t affect your State Pension, but you may have to pay tax on your State Pension. You may have to pay tax on your State Pension even if you’re not working, depending on how much income you have.

A number of things can affect how much State Pension you get – some are mentioned in this guide.
How do I claim my State Pension?

We will usually write to you four months before you reach State Pension age and tell you how to claim. To do this we need to have your up-to-date address, so you must make sure you tell us if you move.

If you haven’t received a letter from us three months before you reach State Pension age and you want to claim your State Pension, please get in touch with us.

What is my State Pension age?
The date you reach State Pension age depends on when you were born.

For men born before 6 December 1953, the current State Pension age is 65.

For women born after 5 April 1950 but before 6 December 1953, their State Pension age is between 60 and 65.

Table 1 on page 10 shows the State Pension age for women born on or after 6 April 1951 but before 6 April 1953.

Increase in State Pension age to 66
From December 2018 the State Pension age for both men and women will start to increase to reach 66 in October 2020.

These changes affect you if you were born on or after 6 December 1953 but before 6 April 1960.

Tables 2 and 3 on pages 12 to 13 show the State Pension age for these men and women.

The State Pension age will increase to 67 between 2026 and 2028.

The government has announced plans to review the State Pension age regularly. The first review will be completed before May 2017.

For more information on changes to State Pension age go to www.gov.uk/calculate-state-pension
How increasing State Pension age will affect other state benefits and payments

To get some social security benefits you have to be below State Pension age. These include Jobseeker’s Allowance, Incapacity Benefit, Employment and Support Allowance and Universal Credit. The increase in women’s State Pension age means that the upper age limit at which women can get these benefits is gradually going up in line with their State Pension age.

The age limit for Income Support, Universal Credit and some other social security benefits for both men and women is also going up.

The age from which you may get Pension Credit – the qualifying age – is going up alongside the increase in State Pension age for women to 65, and the further increase in State Pension age. If you were born before 6 April 1952 you will have already reached the Pension Credit qualifying age. If you were born after this date check the tables below to find out the date you will reach the Pension Credit qualifying age or the date at which you can no longer claim Income Support.

Before we can consider a man or a woman for their first Winter Fuel Payment, they must have reached the State Pension age for women by the end of the September qualifying week.

The State Pension age will go up to 67 between 2026 and 2028. The Pensions Act 2014 brought this change forward by eight years and will affect everyone who was born between 6 April 1960 and 5 April 1969.

The government also changed the way in which the increase in State Pension age is introduced. So rather than reaching State Pension age on a specific date, people born between 6 April 1960 and 5 March 1961 will reach their State Pension age at 66 years and the specified number of months.

* If you were born after 5 April 1969 but before 6 April 1977, your State Pension age is already 67.

You can also use the State Pension age calculator to work out your State Pension age based on the law as it stands now.

What is the basic State Pension?
The basic State Pension is money you may be able to get when you reach State Pension age. The amount depends on the number of qualifying years you have of National Insurance contributions.

How do I get my basic State Pension based on National Insurance contributions?
You may become entitled to a basic State Pension when you reach State Pension age by paying National Insurance contributions, by being treated as having paid them or by being credited with contributions (see pages 17 to 23). The amount of basic State Pension you may get is based on the number of ‘qualifying years’ during which you have paid contributions or received credits before reaching State Pension age.
If you are a married woman or a widow and you chose to pay reduced-rate National Insurance contributions as an employee (sometimes known as the ‘small stamp’ or ‘married woman’s stamp’), the years when you paid these contributions do not count as qualifying years for the State Pension.

What counts as a qualifying year?
If you are employed, a ‘qualifying year’ is a tax year (6 April to 5 April) where you earned (or were credited with earning) a minimum amount. In 2014/2015 the minimum amount is £5,772.
If you are self-employed, a ‘qualifying year’ is a tax year (6 April to 5 April) where you have paid 52 Class 2 contributions. You have to pay these if you earn at least £5,885 a year, but you can pay them voluntarily if you are earning under this amount.
So if at the end of a tax year you have earned (or were credited with earning) the minimum amount or more, or have paid 52 Class 2 contributions, then that is a qualifying year. It doesn’t matter if you worked part-time or full-time.
What is the tax year?
The tax year is 6 April in one year to 5 April the next year.
For example, the tax year 2014/15 runs from 6 April 2014 to 5 April 2015.

If you reach State Pension age on or after 6 April 2010
If you reach State Pension age on or after 6 April 2010, the number of qualifying years needed to get a full basic State Pension (based on the law as it stands now) is 30, for both women and men.

You will need at least one qualifying year of paid or credited contributions to give you some basic State Pension. Each qualifying year of paid and credited contributions will be worth 1/30th of the full basic State Pension, up to a limit of 30/30ths. So, one qualifying year will give you 1/30th of the full basic State Pension, 15 qualifying years will give you half of the full basic State Pension (15/30ths), and 30 qualifying years will give you a full basic State Pension.

If you are under State Pension age and earning above a certain amount (see page 18) you still have to pay National Insurance contributions even if you already have 30 qualifying years. National Insurance contributions count towards other benefits (for example, sickness, unemployment and bereavement benefits) as well as the State Pension.

If you qualify for a full basic State Pension in 2014/15, you will be entitled to £113.10 a week. If you qualify for the minimum basic State Pension (meaning that you have 1/30th of the qualifying years needed for a full basic State Pension), you will be entitled to £3.77 a week.
Getting qualifying years towards your basic State Pension based on National Insurance contributions through paid work

The amount of National Insurance contributions you pay depends on how much you earn.

If you work for an employer and earn between £111 a week and £153 a week you will not have any National Insurance contributions taken out of your pay, but you will be treated as if you have paid National Insurance contributions. (£111 a week is the ‘Lower Earnings Limit’ for 2014/15.) This means you may become entitled to State Pension and other benefits, such as sickness and unemployment benefits, even though you are not paying National Insurance contributions.

You will pay National Insurance contributions for every week that you earn more than £153 when working for an employer. This amount is called the ‘Primary Threshold’. Your employer takes these contributions out of your pay.

If you are self-employed, you pay National Insurance contributions yourself. However much you earn, you will have to pay flat-rate ‘Class 2’ contributions, unless you have a Certificate of Small Earnings Exception that says you do not have to pay these. You can contact HM Revenue & Customs to find out about this.

For a year to count as a qualifying year for your State Pension, based on your earnings in 2014/15 you need to earn at least £111 a week, or £5,772 a year, on which you have paid or are treated as having paid National Insurance contributions.

There are ways that you may get a qualifying year even if you earn a low amount (less than £111 a week or £5,772 a year in 2014/15) or you are taking time out of paid work.
Getting National Insurance credits

You may be able to get National Insurance credits when you cannot work, so that you may become entitled to basic State Pension when you reach State Pension age. This could be because you are ill, or unemployed and registered as looking for work. You may get credits with certain benefits or payments, for example Jobseeker’s Allowance, Employment and Support Allowance, Child Benefit for a child under 12 and Carer’s Allowance.

These credits are added to any National Insurance you have paid.

National Insurance credits will count towards a qualifying year for basic State Pension in the same way as National Insurance contributions. There will be certain conditions you need to meet before you can get a credit, and these will depend on why you cannot work.

Getting your basic State Pension based on National Insurance contributions if you are not working or are earning a low amount.

Read the text in this box if you are a woman born before 6 April 1950, or a man born before 6 April 1945.

If you reached State Pension age before 6 April 2010

If you were not working, your entitlement may have been protected through National Insurance credits or Home Responsibilities Protection (see page 20). Or you may have been paying voluntary National Insurance contributions (see page 23).

To qualify for any basic State Pension, you need to have at least one qualifying year from paid, or treated as paid, National Insurance contributions. You also need a certain number of qualifying years.
Men approaching State Pension age

If you are a man approaching State Pension age and you do not pay National Insurance contributions, you may get National Insurance credits automatically. These credits are called ‘autocredits’.

Autocredits are being phased out in line with the increase in women’s State Pension age.

Home Responsibilities Protection

For periods up to 5 April 2010, if you were caring for a child or someone with a long-term illness or disability, Home Responsibilities Protection may protect your basic State Pension. It may protect your entitlement for periods even when you were not in paid work, had low earnings (below the Lower Earnings Limit for any tax year) or were not getting National Insurance credits.

Home Responsibilities Protection was available for full tax years from April 1978 until April 2010. It helped protect your pension by reducing the number of qualifying years you needed for a full basic State Pension. For a full basic State Pension, Home Responsibilities Protection could not reduce the number of qualifying years below 20 for women or men. Also, it did not guarantee you would get a basic State Pension.
Read the text in this box if you are a woman born before 6 April 1950, or a man born before 6 April 1945.

You could get Home Responsibilities Protection if, for full tax years between April 1978 and April 2010, you were:

- getting Child Benefit for a child under 16
- a registered foster carer (for tax years from April 2003 only)
- caring for a sick or disabled person (for at least 35 hours a week), who was getting Attendance Allowance, Disability Living Allowance (middle-rate or highest-rate care component) or Constant Attendance Allowance, or
- getting Income Support and you were caring for someone who was sick or had a disability.

In any one year you could be covered by a combination of these conditions. For example, you could have been receiving Child Benefit for a child under 16 for part of the year, then acting as a registered foster carer for the rest of that year.

If you reached State Pension age on or after 6 April 2008. Transferring Home Responsibilities Protection to the person who needs it the most

Only the person claiming Child Benefit could get Home Responsibilities Protection automatically – which helped to protect that person’s basic State Pension.

However, if your partner paid National Insurance contributions and may become entitled to a basic State Pension, while you stopped work to care for your children, you are more likely than your partner to need help protecting your basic State Pension.
If you have been caring for a child but your partner claimed the Child Benefit and does not need Home Responsibilities Protection, then you can have Home Responsibilities Protection transferred to your account. You should apply using form CF411.

For a copy of form CF411 www.gov.uk/home-responsibilities-protection-hrp

You need to have been living with your partner and sharing care of a child in each year for which you want Home Responsibilities Protection transferred to you.

Read the text in this box if you are a woman born on or after 6 April 1950, or a man born on or after 6 April 1945.

If you reach State Pension age on or after 6 April 2010 and there are times when you were not working, you may get National Insurance credits so that you may become entitled to basic State Pension. You may also have paid or be able to pay voluntary National Insurance contributions.

Replacing Home Responsibilities Protection with new National Insurance credits

Home Responsibilities Protection has been replaced for people reaching State Pension age on or after 6 April 2010.
Credits for parents and carers
From 6 April 2010, parents and carers may be able to get qualifying years through new weekly credits for the basic State Pension and additional State Pension (see page 30 for additional State Pension). If you are a parent or carer, you may get a credit for each week in which you are:

- getting Child Benefit for at least one child aged under 12
- an approved foster carer, or
- caring (for at least 20 hours a week) for one or more people who are getting Attendance Allowance, the daily living component of Personal Independence Payment, Disability Living Allowance (middle-rate or highest-rate care component), Constant Attendance Allowance or Armed Forces Independence Payment.

We will also give a credit to people who are caring for at least 20 hours a week for other disabled people, and the need for care is certified by a health or social care professional. There is no limit to the number of years between 6 April 2010 and the date you reach your State Pension age that you can get these credits, as long as you meet the conditions.

If you reach State Pension age on or after 6 April 2010, any years of Home Responsibilities Protection you already had have been converted into qualifying years for the basic State Pension under the new rules. You can have up to 22 years converted in this way.

Home Responsibilities Protection also counts towards bereavement benefits. We will have converted it to qualifying years, when bereavement benefits are claimed for a spouse or civil partner who died on or after 6 April 2010.
Specified Adult Childcare credits
New Specified Adult Childcare credits were introduced by the government from the 2011/2012 tax year. You may be able to get these credits if you care for a family member under 12 and you’re an adult under State Pension age. These credits count towards basic State Pension and certain bereavement benefits.

You will have to claim the credits; they will not be added automatically to your NI contribution records.

There’s more information online
www.gov.uk/boost-state-pension/eligibility

Paying voluntary contributions
You may be able to pay voluntary Class 3 National Insurance contributions to cover previous years that you do not have enough contributions for. You must normally pay the voluntary contributions within six years of the end of the tax year the payment is for. However, special arrangements were put in place for the following groups:

- People who reach State Pension age between 6 April 2008 and 5 April 2015. You may still be able to pay for some additional years.
- People who reach State Pension age from 6 April 2016.

For more information
www.gov.uk/voluntary-national-insurance-contributions

State Pension top up
If you will reach State Pension age before 6 April 2016, you may be entitled to make lump-sum voluntary State Pension top up contributions. These contributions would allow you to increase your pension income by up to £25 a week. State Pension top up contributions can be made from October 2015.

For more information, search for ‘additional State Pension top up’ on GOV.UK.
Improving your basic State Pension

If I haven’t paid or been credited with enough National Insurance contributions, how can I improve my basic State Pension?

If you are married or in a civil partnership and your own National Insurance contributions:

• aren’t enough to give you any basic State Pension of your own, or
• mean you will get less than £67.80 a week basic State Pension, you may be able to get some basic State Pension based on the National Insurance contributions of your spouse or civil partner. We use the word spouse to mean the person you are married to.

If you are a woman married to a man you may be able to get some basic State Pension based on your husband’s National Insurance contributions if he has reached State Pension age.

If you are:

• a married man
• a woman married to a woman, or
• a civil partner

you may be able to get some basic State Pension based on your spouse’s or civil partner’s National Insurance contributions if she or he:

• was born on or after 6 April 1950, and
• has reached State Pension age.

If you are a woman married to a woman who legally changed gender from male to female after your marriage to her began, and there has been no break in your marriage, you may be able to have your basic State Pension improved by using her contributions even if she was born before 6 April 1950.
This is the same treatment as if she had not changed her legal gender.

Depending on the contributions your spouse or civil partner has made, you could get a basic State Pension of up to £67.80, including any basic State Pension of your own. So long as they have reached State Pension age your spouse or civil partner doesn’t have to have claimed their own State Pension, and you don’t have to be living with them to get this basic State Pension.

If your spouse or civil partner reaches State Pension age on or after 6 April 2016 they will get the new State Pension. The existing State Pension rules will still apply to you if you reach State Pension age before that date, but you will only be able to use the National Insurance contributions they made for tax years up to and including 2015/2016 to improve your basic State Pension.

What happens if my marriage or civil partnership ends?

You may be able to use the National Insurance contribution record of your ex-husband, ex-wife or ex-civil partner to help increase your basic State Pension if:

- you are divorced
- your marriage has been annulled, or
- your civil partnership is dissolved (legally ended) or annulled.

This won’t affect your ex-partner’s basic State Pension. You won’t be able to use your ex-partner’s contributions if you remarry or form a new civil partnership before you reach State Pension age.

If your spouse or civil partner reaches State Pension age on or after 6 April 2016 they will get the new State Pension. The existing State Pension rules will still apply to you if you reach State Pension age before that date, but you will only be able to use the National Insurance contributions they made for tax years up to and including 2015/2016 to improve your basic State Pension.
What happens if my husband, wife or civil partner dies?

If your husband, wife or civil partner dies, you may be able to use their National Insurance contribution record to help you get a better State Pension.

If you haven’t reached State Pension age, and your husband, wife or civil partner dies, you may be able to get bereavement benefits (under the Bereavement Benefit Scheme).

If you are over State Pension age and your husband, wife or civil partner was not entitled to a State Pension based on their own National Insurance contribution record when they died, you may be entitled to a Bereavement Payment. This is a single lump sum payable straight after your husband, wife or civil partner dies.

If you are a woman already getting benefits under the previous Widow’s Benefit Scheme (for women widowed on or before 8 April 2001), you will be able to keep receiving these benefits for as long as you meet the conditions. You will not be able to get bereavement benefits.

If your spouse or civil partner reaches State Pension on or after 6 April 2016 they will get the new State Pension. The present State Pension rules will still apply to you if you reach State Pension age before that date, but you will only be able to use the National Insurance contributions they made for tax years up to and including 2015/2016 to improve your basic State Pension.

You won’t be able to use your late partner’s contributions if you remarry or form a new civil partnership before you reach State Pension age.
Other amounts paid in the State Pension

Adult Dependency Increases
From 6 April 2010, you will no longer be able to get a new Adult Dependency Increase. If you are already entitled to this increase on 5 April 2010, you will be able to keep it until you no longer meet the conditions for the increase, or until 5 April 2020, whichever comes first.

You may be entitled to other help towards paying your rent and council tax. For more information, contact your local council.

How much basic State Pension will I get?
In 2014/15 the full basic State Pension is £113.10 a week for a single person. You may get less if you do not have the maximum number of qualifying years.

Since April 2011, the basic State Pension goes up every year by whichever of the following is the highest:

- earnings - the average growth in wages (in Great Britain)
- prices - the percentage increases in prices (in the UK)
- 2.5%.

The State Pension and Income Tax
When you reach State Pension age you no longer pay National Insurance contributions. But you don’t automatically stop paying Income Tax.

You may have to pay tax on your State Pension and on any company or personal pensions depending on the total amount of your income. Your State Pension is paid before any tax is taken off, but company and personal pensions usually have tax taken off first.

When you are thinking about whether to claim your State Pension straight away or put off claiming it (see page 37) you need to think about how you will be taxed. This applies to your wages (if you are working) and to any other income, such as a private pension.
If you work after you reach State Pension age, you can still claim your State Pension at the same time. Your earnings and the hours you work will not affect your State Pension, but you may pay tax on the pension as well as on your earnings, depending on how much you earn.

When you claim your State Pension we will tell HMRC how much State Pension you will get and the date you will start to get it.

HMRC may send you a PAYE coding notice letter showing your tax code. The letter will explain how the tax code is worked out and how the tax will be collected. Otherwise HMRC will contact you if you need to fill in a tax return. There’s more information at

Tax is charged on some state benefits, but not all. It’s important to know which are taxable. There’s more information at

Additional State Pension

What is the additional State Pension?

The additional State Pension is money you may get as well as your basic State Pension. The amount of additional State Pension you get depends on how much you earn (or are treated as having earned), and the amount of National Insurance contributions you have paid, or are treated as having paid (since 6 April 1978).

Your additional State Pension may be made up of:
- a State Earnings-Related Pension Scheme (SERPS) pension
- a State Second Pension, or
- both.

When can I get additional State Pension?

You can get additional State Pension (SERPS and State Second Pension) when you have reached State Pension age and you claim your State Pension.
The State Earnings-Related Pension Scheme (SERPS)

You may be entitled to additional State Pension through SERPS.

The amount you may get depends on how much you earned, and the amount of National Insurance contributions you paid (or are treated as having paid) before 2002. It also depends on whether you were ‘contracted out’ of SERPS by your employer and put into a workplace (occupational) pension. If you contracted out of SERPS, this will reduce the amount of additional State Pension you may get. If you worked for yourself before 2002 and paid Class 2 National Insurance contributions during that time, this won’t have counted towards SERPS.

The government changed the SERPS scheme when it introduced the State Second Pension in 2002. Any additional State Pension you get through SERPS before 2002 will be added to your State Second Pension.

The State Second Pension

The government introduced the State Second Pension in 2002. The State Second Pension gives people who earn lower wages, or cannot work as much as other people, the chance to get a better State Pension.

You may be able to get additional State Pension through the State Second Pension if:

• you are an employee earning above £5,772 a year (in 2014/15) from any one job, or
• you are a carer or someone with a long-term illness or disability.
If you have worked for yourself and paid Class 2 National Insurance contributions for any period since 2002, this won’t count towards State Second Pension.

To become entitled to a State Second Pension when you reach State Pension age, you need to:

• have earnings above the National Insurance Lower Earnings Limit for the whole tax year
• be a carer for the whole tax year, or
• have a long-term illness or disability for the whole tax year.

You cannot combine periods of earnings, caring or illness within a tax year to get entitlement to the State Second Pension for periods before 2010.

If you work for an employer and you earn more than £5,772 a year (in 2014/15), you will be included in the State Second Pension scheme. If your employer has a contracted out salary-related (defined-benefit) workplace pension scheme that you are eligible to join, it is possible to contract out of (leave) the State Second Pension to build up benefits in the workplace (occupational) pension scheme.

Both you and your employer will pay lower rates of National Insurance contributions. A defined benefit pension scheme is an arrangement some employers set up, with minimum standards set in law, to give the people who work for them a pension when they retire. Most or all of your State Second Pension will then come from your employer’s scheme. Your basic State Pension will not be affected.

There’s more information on contracting out on page 34.

How is the State Second Pension worked out?

If you are entitled to a State Second Pension, what you get is based on:

• the earnings you pay standard-rate National Insurance contributions on, or
• the earnings you are treated as having.
Under current rules, you may get a State Second Pension at different rates depending on how much you earn. From April 2010 there are two bands of earnings.

These bands are:

- earnings at the Lower Earnings Limit (£5,772 in 2014/15) up to (but not above) the Low Earnings Threshold (£15,100 in 2014/15),
- earnings above the Low Earnings Threshold but not above the ‘Upper Accrual Point’ (£40,040).

From April 2014 you will get a standard flat-rate amount of State Second Pension, worth around £1.77 a week, for each qualifying year. Also, people earning above the Low Earnings Threshold are entitled to an extra earnings-related payment.

If you want to know how much your State Second Pension is likely to be, you should get an estimate of your State Pension (see page 43).

I’m a carer. Can I get a State Second Pension?

If you’re a carer, you may get a State Second Pension if you’re not working at all or you’re earning less than £5,772 a year (in 2014/15), and any of the following apply to you:

- You are looking after a child under 12 and are getting Child Benefit for that child (before April 2010 the child had to be under age 6).
- You spend at least 20 hours a week caring for a severely disabled person.
- You are an approved foster carer.
- You are entitled to Carer’s Allowance – even if you’re not getting it because you get another benefit that pays you more.
In any of those cases, we'll treat you as if you are earning at the Low Earnings Threshold (£15,100 a year in 2014/15).

If you are a carer and qualify for the State Second Pension, you will earn about £1.77 a week of State Second Pension for each full tax year you are a carer. You will get this as part of your State Pension when you reach State Pension age and claim your State Pension. There is no limit to the number of years that can count in this way.

I’m ill or disabled. Can I get a State Second Pension?

You may get a State Second Pension if you’re not working at all, or you’re earning less than £5,772 a year (in 2014/15), and any of the following apply to you:

- You’re entitled to long-term Incapacity Benefit or Employment and Support Allowance.
- You would be entitled to long-term Incapacity Benefit or Employment and Support Allowance but it is not payable because of another benefit you get or you are not entitled but submit medical certificates for National Insurance credit purposes only.
- You get protected Severe Disablement Allowance.

If you can’t do paid work because you are ill or disabled, and you qualify for the State Second Pension, you will earn about £1.77 a week of State Second Pension for each full tax year you are ill or disabled. You will receive this as part of your State Pension when you reach State Pension age and claim your State Pension.

If you want to know how much your State Second Pension is likely to be, you should get an estimate of your State Pension (see page 43).
Read the text in this box if you are a woman born on or after 6 April 1950, or a man born on or after 6 April 1945.

If you reach State Pension age on or after 6 April 2010

Before 6 April 2010, any credits you have received for caring, illness or disability only count towards your State Second Pension if:

• you had been a carer for the whole tax year, or
• you had a long-term illness or disability for the whole tax year.

From 6 April 2010, changes in the rules allow you to combine any credits you have been awarded during the tax year with any earnings above the Lower Earnings Limit. This means that both your earnings and your credits can count towards your State Pension.

Contracting out of the additional State Pension

What is contracting out?

Contracting out means leaving the additional State Pension (also known as SERPS or the State Second Pension). But with the introduction of the new State Pension, contracting out will come to an end in April 2016.

Salary-related pension schemes

If you are an employee, you can do this if you join a salary-related (defined benefit) workplace pension scheme. If you are contracted out on a salary-related basis, you and your employer will pay lower National Insurance contributions.
Examples of how the State Second Pension can help

Helping a low earner

Robin works part-time in a supermarket warehouse. He earns £8,500 a year. Under the rules for State Second Pension, people who earn above the Lower Earnings Limit (£5,772 in 2014/15) but below the Low Earnings Threshold (£15,100 in 2014/15) are treated as if they had earnings at the Low Earnings Threshold. So we treat Robin as if he had earnings of £15,100 (in 2014/15), and he may become entitled to some additional State Pension through the State Second Pension when he reaches State Pension age.

Helping a parent

Neela is 31 and had worked full-time since she was 18. When her daughter Mina was born in December 2001, Neela decided to stop work to look after her.

Neela is the person who had claimed and been awarded Child Benefit, so she qualified for Home Responsibilities Protection to protect her basic State Pension. She may become entitled to some State Second Pension when she reaches State Pension age for each full tax year since 6 April 2002 - when the State Second Pension began – until Mina’s sixth birthday in December 2007. So Neela may become entitled to some State Second Pension for five years (from 6 April 2002 until 5 April 2007).

Under the new rules, Neela may become entitled to some State Second Pension for three years from 6 April 2010 until Mina’s 12th birthday.
Helping someone who is ill or disabled
Derek had worked for 37 years and paid standard-rate Class 1 National Insurance contributions as an employee in each of those years, but became ill in September 1999. He was too ill to work, so he got long-term Incapacity Benefit and contribution-based Employment and Support Allowance until he reached State Pension age in May 2010. Derek qualifies for a State Second Pension, based on each full tax year for which he got Incapacity Benefit and contribution-based Employment and Support Allowance between 6 April 2002 (when State Second Pension began) and reaching State Pension age.

Inherited additional State Pension

Do I get more State Pension if I’m a widow, widower or surviving civil partner?
If you’re a widow, widower or surviving civil partner you may inherit:
• between half and all of your husband’s, wife’s or civil partner’s SERPS pension (the amount you get depends on when you were widowed or became a surviving civil partner, and when your husband, wife or civil partner reached State Pension age), and
• up to half of your husband’s, wife’s or civil partner’s State Second Pension.

If you remarry or form a new civil partnership before you reach State Pension age, you will not be able to inherit any of your previous husband’s, wife’s or civil partner’s additional State Pension.
If your husband, wife or civil partner dies while you are still under State Pension age and you have children, you may also get inherited additional State Pension as part of Widowed Parent’s Allowance.

If your husband, wife or civil partner dies after you’ve reached State Pension age but when they are still under State Pension age, you may be able to inherit part of their additional State Pension only if:

- you reached State Pension age on or after 6 April 2010, or
- you are a woman whose husband had died, or
- you are a woman whose female spouse has died and she had legally changed gender from male to female after your marriage began.

If your spouse or civil partner reaches State Pension age on or after 6 April 2016 they will get the new State Pension. The existing State Pension rules will still apply to you if you reach State Pension age before that date, but you will only be able to use the National Insurance contributions they made for tax years up to and including 2015/2016 to improve your basic State Pension.

Graduated Retirement Benefit

If you were an employee and paid graduated National Insurance contributions between 6 April 1961 and 5 April 1975, you may get some extra money with your State Pension called Graduated Retirement Benefit.

Putting off claiming your State Pension

You do not have to claim your State Pension when you reach State Pension age. Deciding when to claim your State Pension is important. If you don’t need the income from your State Pension when you reach State Pension age (because you are still working or have other income), you could put off claiming it until later. This is called ‘deferring’ your State Pension.
If you decide to put off (defer) claiming your State Pension when you reach State Pension age, you could choose to get extra State Pension or a one-off lump-sum payment.

How to get extra State Pension

To get extra State Pension, you need to decide not to claim your State Pension for a period of time. You must put off claiming for at least five weeks for it to increase the amount of State Pension you get later.

Your extra State Pension is worked out at 1% for every five weeks you put off claiming. This comes to about 10.4% extra for every full year you put off claiming.

How to get a lump sum

If you put off claiming your State Pension, you could choose to get a lump sum instead of extra State Pension. You can only do this if you decide to put off claiming your State Pension for at least 12 months in a row.

We work out the lump sum by adding up the amount of weekly State Pension you would have got, plus interest. You may have to pay tax on the lump sum, depending on how much income you have.

What if I am getting other social security benefits?

If you put off claiming State Pension while getting some other benefits, you will not build up any extra State Pension or a lump sum for the days you get the other benefits. These other benefits are:

- Carer’s Allowance
- Pension Credit
- Severe Disablement Allowance
- Unemployability Supplement
- Widow’s Pension
- Widowed Mother’s Allowance, and
- Incapacity Benefit.
Also you will not build up extra State Pension or a lump sum for the days that you, or your partner (if you are a member of a couple), get one or more of the following income-related benefits:

- Pension Credit
- Income Support
- Income-based Jobseeker’s Allowance
- Income-related Employment and Support Allowance, and
- Universal Credit.

For more information on deferring your State Pension, go to www.gov.uk/deferring-state-pension

Alternatively, if you want to discuss your options for deferring your State Pension you could talk to an independent financial adviser. They may charge you for their advice.

Healthcare cover if you live somewhere else in the European Economic Area (EEA) or in Switzerland

If you live somewhere else in the EEA or in Switzerland you may be covered for healthcare paid by the UK if you are getting a UK State Pension. However, for the period you defer taking your State Pension the UK will not be responsible for providing you with healthcare cover. You will need to make your own arrangements.

Pension sharing

What happens to my pension if I get divorced or my civil partnership is dissolved (legally ended)?

If you get divorced or your civil partnership is dissolved, or your marriage or civil partnership is annulled, the courts can decide how all your ‘assets’ should be divided up. They will take into account the value of your pension, as it is part of your assets.

If your marriage ends (in divorce or annulment), you and your ex-husband or ex-wife can share the value of the second pensions you and they are entitled to (see below). This also applies to same-sex couples whose civil partnerships or marriages have been annulled or dissolved.

Pension sharing gives you and the courts more choice about what to do. You may not have to share your entitlement but it is an option available to the courts for couples who are entitled to a second pension such as:

• the additional State Pension (SERPS or State Second Pension)
• a company pension
• a stakeholder pension
• a personal pension.

Pension sharing does not apply to:

• the basic State Pension
• couples who started divorce or annulment legal proceedings before 1 December 2000
• couples who separate but do not divorce or dissolve (legally end) their civil partnership.
More advice and information about pension sharing when your marriage or civil partnership ends

To find out more about how your additional State Pension and other second pensions could be affected, you could get advice from a lawyer or an independent financial adviser (or both). They may charge you for this advice.

If I work abroad, can I get a State Pension?

If you move abroad to work before you reach State Pension age, you may not be able to pay National Insurance contributions for the years you are abroad. (This may affect your entitlement to basic State Pension and any additional State Pension.)

Whether you have to pay the National Insurance contributions depends on your circumstances (for example, the country you are working in, how long you will be there, whether your employer is a UK company or a foreign one, and the pattern of your work). If you do not have to pay National Insurance contributions while you are abroad, you may be able to qualify to pay National Insurance contributions or you can pay voluntary contributions to protect your pension.

You can get more information about this from HM Revenue & Customs.

Can I get my State Pension paid to me overseas?

You can usually get your State Pension paid anywhere you live.

How much will I get?

If you go to live abroad permanently when you are getting your State Pension, you will only get any increase in your basic State Pension or additional State Pension if you live in:

• a country that belongs to the European Economic Area or Switzerland, or
• a country that has an agreement with the UK to allow these increases.

To find out which countries these are and for more information on how UK state pensions are paid to people abroad, you can:

Returning to Great Britain, or arriving here

If you have just come to Great Britain, or are returning after a period abroad, the rules for some benefits are different – even if you have a British Passport. For more information you can contact the International Pension Centre. There’s also information on our website about how your UK State Pension is affected by living in different countries, and how payments are made to people living abroad.

How much is my State Pension likely to be?

There are two ways you can find out how much State Pension you may get:

• use the online State Pension calculator to quickly get an estimate of your basic State Pension and the earliest date you might get it from, or

• apply for a State Pension statement, which will give you an estimate of your State Pension based on your National Insurance contributions record.

To use the calculator, or for more information on how to get a State Pension statement go to

www.gov.uk/calculate-state-pension
If you’re very near or over State Pension age
If you’re over State Pension age or less than 30 days away from it, you can’t get a State Pension statement. For more information:
- go to www.gov.uk/contact-pension-service to find your local pension centre
- phone 0345 606 0265 (0345 606 0275 if you speak Welsh and live in Wales)
- textphone 0345 606 0285 (English), 0345 606 0295 (Welsh), or
- if you live outside the UK, phone +00 44 191 218 7777.

Non-contributory State Pension for people who are over 80
If you are over 80 and don’t have a State Pension, or have only a small State Pension, you may get a special State Pension. It is ‘non-contributory’ – which means you don’t have to have paid National Insurance contributions to get it. This State Pension is £67.80 a week for 2014/15.

We will pay this to you if you:
- are aged 80 or over
- live in Great Britain at the time you claim
- have lived in Great Britain for 10 years or more during the 20 years since your 60th birthday, and
- have no State Pension, or have a basic State Pension of less than £67.80 in 2014/15.
Pension Credit

In some circumstances, you may be able to get Pension Credit. Pension Credit is made up of two parts: Guarantee Credit and Savings Credit.

Guarantee Credit works by topping up your weekly income by a certain amount. You may get more if, for example, you are severely disabled, a carer or have housing costs such as a mortgage.

To apply for Guarantee Credit you must have reached the Pension Credit qualifying age. This is gradually going up in line with the increase in the State Pension age for women to 65, and the further increase in State Pension age.

To find out the age at which you can apply for Pension Credit go to

www.gov.uk/calculate-state-pension

If you have a partner, one of you can be under this age but the person who applies must have reached the qualifying age.

Savings Credit can provide extra money for pensioners who have saved some money to help provide for themselves in their retirement. The age from which you can get the Savings Credit is 65. If you are currently aged 65 or over and living in Great Britain you may be entitled to Savings Credit.

You may be able to get Savings Credit as well as Guarantee Credit.
Important – changes to Savings Credit

As part of the Pensions Act 2014, the Savings Credit part of Pension Credit will close for people reaching State Pension age on or after 6 April 2016. Following changes in the law this will include those with a partner who reached State Pension age before 6 April 2016. However, some protection will be given to these couples who were already getting Savings Credit on 6 April 2016.

Gender Recognition Act 2004

On 4 April 2005 a new law came into force preventing discrimination against people whose gender has changed. From that date entitlement to State Pension for transsexual claimants is based on their acquired gender if they have a full Gender Recognition Certificate. For periods before that date entitlement to State Pension for male to female transsexual claimants may be based upon their acquired gender if they have:

- reached female State Pension age, and
- had gender reassignment surgery before that date.

Glossary

Pensions can be complicated. Here are explanations of some of the words and phrases we use in this leaflet, or that you may read or hear when finding out about pensions.

Adult Dependency Increase
An increase in your State Pension for your wife or husband, or someone who is looking after your children, if he or she is financially dependent on you.

Defer
This is when you put off claiming, or decide to give up getting, your State Pension until a time that suits you.

Graduated Retirement Benefit
Benefit based on graduated National Insurance contributions that a person may have paid between April 1961 and April 1975.

Lower Earnings Limit
The lowest weekly earnings on which a person is treated as paying National Insurance contributions for benefit purposes. We treat a person receiving credits or paying flat-rate voluntary or self-employed contributions as having earnings at the Lower Earnings Limit for each week.

National Insurance contributions

Class 1 National Insurance contributions
These are paid by people who are employed and by their employers.

Class 2 National Insurance contributions
These are paid by self-employed people. Class 2 contributions are paid at a weekly flat rate. The rate is reviewed every year.
State Pensions

Class 3 National Insurance contributions
These are voluntary contributions that may be paid by people for a tax year which is not a qualifying year for basic State Pension and bereavement benefits.

Class 4 National Insurance contributions
These are paid by self-employed people on top of their Class 2 contributions. The amount they must pay depends on their business profits over a certain limit (the Lower Profit Limit). Class 4 contributions do not count for State Pension or any other benefits.

Qualifying year
• Since April 1978 a qualifying year has meant a tax year in which a person received (or was treated as having received) qualifying earnings of at least 52 times the weekly Lower Earnings Limit set for that year. For the tax years 1975/76 to 1977/78, a qualifying year is 50 times the weekly Lower Earnings Limit set for each year.
• For the period before April 1975, we changed the flat-rate National Insurance contributions (‘stamps’) into a number of qualifying years by dividing the total number of contributions paid (or credited with having been paid) by 50. There is a limit on this number. This means that the figure cannot be more than the number of years in a person’s working life up to 5 April 1975.

State Earnings-Related Pension Scheme (SERPS)
The additional State Pension based on the tax years 1978/79 to 2001/02 inclusive.

Upper Accrual Point
The Upper Accrual Point is the upper limit for earnings used to work out entitlement to the State Second Pension. It is £40,040 a year.

This means any National Insurance contributions you pay above the Upper Accrual Point do not count for additional State Pension.
Important information about this leaflet

This leaflet is only a guide and does not cover every circumstance. We have done our best to make sure that the information in this leaflet is correct as of October 2014. It is possible that some of the information is oversimplified, or may become inaccurate over time, for example because of changes to the law.
