Introduction

1. The purpose of this policy review paper is to seek views on new draft regulations imposing specific duties to support better performance of the public sector Equality Duty.
2. The Equality Act 2010 contains a new integrated Equality Duty on all public bodies which brings together the existing duties on race, gender and disability and extends to cover gender reassignment in full, age, religion or belief and sexual orientation. The general duty set out in the Act requires public bodies, and others who exercise public functions, to have due regard to the need to eliminate unlawful discrimination, harassment and victimisation; to advance equality of opportunity; and to foster good relations between people who share a protected characteristic and those who do not share it. The Act provides a power to make regulations imposing specific duties on public bodies to support better performance of the general duty.
3. The Government is committed to reducing burdens and bureaucracy on public bodies, moving away from a process-driven approach to a focus on transparency in order to free up public bodies to do what is appropriate in their circumstances, to take responsibility for their own performance, and to be held to account by the public. This means a shift in approach – a focus on performance, not process.
4. Following publication of draft specific duties regulations on 12 January 2011, we have looked again and think there is room to do more to strip out unnecessary process requirements and to make public bodies truly transparent and accountable to the public for their performance on equality. We have developed the new draft regulations at page 8 of this document after further consideration of the outcome of the public consultation on specific duties last year and the wider policy objective of ensuring that public bodies consider equality when carrying out their functions without imposing unnecessary burdens and bureaucracy.
5. The new single, general Equality Duty will come into force on 5 April 2011. We want to ensure that the specific duties which support it are effective and deliver real transparency and democratic accountability. For the period from 5 April until the new specific duties are in place, public bodies will still need to comply with the general Equality Duty. In doing so, they will be able to refer to the Equality and Human Rights Commission's guidance and draft statutory Code of Practice. We intend to bring the specific duties into force in July 2011.
6. Comments on the draft regulations at the end of this document are sought by 21 April 2011.

Reducing bureaucracy and delivering equality improvements

7. The purpose of the public sector Equality Duty is to promote equality for all. The Duty makes sure that all our public bodies play their part in delivering equal treatment and equal opportunity, to help us achieve a strong economy and a fair society. We want the Duty to achieve real changes in people's lives and experiences. The specific duties will ensure that public bodies are accountable for delivering on the Equality Duty by requiring them to be transparent about their own staff and the public services that they deliver, so giving the public the information they need to hold them to account.

8. Up to now, specific duties under the existing public sector equality duties were used to prescribe processes public bodies must undertake, in the hope that this would deliver equality improvements on the ground. Public bodies were held to account for whether they followed the right processes, not whether in following those processes they delivered real equality improvements. The approach the Government now wants to take on the specific duties turns this on its head – it means that public bodies will be held to account – through greater transparency and challenge from the public - for the equality improvements they deliver, not the processes they go through. This is what will ultimately deliver on the aims of the Equality Duty – to eliminate discrimination, advance equality of opportunity and foster good relations for public sector workers and service users, not to ensure that public bodies comply with bureaucratic processes.

Summary of the new draft regulations

9. The revised draft regulations will require public bodies to:
- publish equality objectives every four years;
 - publish information annually to demonstrate their compliance with the general Equality Duty;
 - in particular publish information relating to their employees (for bodies with 150 or more staff) and others affected by their policies and practices (such as service users).
10. All information must be published in a way that is accessible to the public.

Background

11. In August 2010, the Coalition Government consulted¹ on draft specific duties, based on four key objectives:

- (a) Improving transparency: through requiring public bodies to publish data on their impact on equality and transparent information on their staff and pay.
- (b) Devolving power: liberating public bodies from top-down targets and allowing them to identify and work towards achieving their own priorities.
- (c) Focusing on measurable results: to reduce the time public bodies spend fulfilling repetitive or unproductive processes and instead focus on what works.
- (d) Enabling the public to exercise greater choice: more freely available data will enable people to compare the performance of public bodies and hold them to account.

12. On 12 January 2011, the Government published its response² to the consultation, which included revised draft regulations taking account of the responses received.

² Equality Act 2010: The public sector Equality Duty - Promoting equality through transparency - Summary of responses to the consultation

Details of the new approach

13. The Government has looked again at the specific duties and their relationship both to the general duty and to guidance and the statutory Code of Practice. In doing so, the aim has been to ensure that equality considerations are appropriately factored into the policies and practices of public bodies, while at the same time minimising the risk that public bodies would feel compelled to do more than is needed, by following arduous and ineffective bureaucratic processes which go against the Government's drive to free the public sector from unnecessary process requirements and top-down targets. The Government is interested in the delivery of equal treatment and equal opportunities for all, not the performance of processes that support it.

14. The key differences of the new draft regulations from those published on 12 January are discussed below. In brief, they are the removal of requirements on public bodies to publish details of the:

- engagement they have undertaken when determining their policies;
- engagement they have undertaken when determining their equality objectives;
- equality analysis they have undertaken in reaching their policy decisions; and
- information they considered when undertaking such analysis.

15. The new regulations also omit the regulation which gave the Secretary of State a power to specify certain matters which public bodies must consider.

16. The reason we are proposing these changes is because we want to shift the focus of public bodies onto the delivery of equality improvements for their staff and service users, rather than have them focusing their efforts on bureaucratic processes. We are therefore confident that these changes will have a positive effect on the delivery of equality improvements for all the protected characteristics covered by the Equality Act 2010. We have considered each of the changes carefully and are satisfied that none of them will have a negative effect on equality for any of the protected characteristics.

17. We believe that public bodies should take responsibility for how they go about responding to their obligations. Challenge from the public will be the key means of holding public bodies to account for their performance on equality. We are developing tools and mechanisms to support organisations and individuals to challenge public bodies effectively to ensure they publish the right information and deliver the rights results, with a particular focus on addressing the barriers facing some disabled people.

Lighter-touch transparency requirement

18. The new draft regulations:

- Change the wording from: “Publish sufficient information to demonstrate its compliance...” to “Publish information to demonstrate its compliance...”;
- Remove the requirement to publish evidence of the analysis a public body undertook to establish whether its policies and practices had furthered the aims set out in section 149(1) of the Act, and remove the requirement to publish details of the information it considered when it undertook the analysis;
- Remove the requirement to publish details of the engagement the public authority undertook with persons whom it considered to have an interest in furthering the aims set out in section 149(1) of the Act, and details of the engagement it undertook when developing its equality objectives

19. Under the requirements of the general duty to have “due regard” to the matters set out in the Act, public bodies will need to understand the effect of their policies and practices on equality – this will involve looking at evidence, engaging with people, staff, service users and others and considering the effect of what they do on the whole community. Information to help public bodies comply with the duties and understand what constitutes good practice will be delivered through guidance, not regulation.

Equality objectives

20. The new draft regulations:

- amend the requirement from “Public authorities must prepare and publish objectives” to “Public authorities must prepare and publish one or more objectives”
- remove the requirement to set out how progress will be measured.

21. In response to the August 2010 consultation, some respondents were concerned that a reference to one or more objectives could infer that setting a single objective would be sufficient to meet the duty, so the Government removed reference to “one or more” from the draft regulations published on 12 January. On considering the matter further, the Government recognises that in taking a proportionate approach which takes account of the size and role of the public authority and its current equality performance, in some circumstances a single objective could be appropriate.

22. Under the 12 January draft regulations, there was no set number of objectives that public bodies would be required to have. The same is true of the new draft regulations.

23. A requirement on public bodies to describe the process of how they will measure progress against their objectives will not contribute to the delivery of equality improvements, so we have removed it.

Matters specified by a Minister of the Crown

24. The new draft regulations:

- Remove the requirement for public authorities to consider such matters as may be specified by a Minister of the Crown in a written statement to Parliament.

25. Some respondents to the August 2010 consultation thought that this provision could be invoked if it became necessary to highlight significant national equality issues.

26. We have been clear that equality considerations for public bodies will vary according to their nature and role. Priorities are best set by public bodies locally, not by Ministers centrally. Other issues that this provision could be used for (e.g. standards for the publication of data) can be dealt with through guidance.

Conclusion and next steps

27. We are committed to developing a set of specific duties that are flexible, proportionate and light-touch, and which support delivery of equal treatment and equality of opportunity for all. The new draft regulations achieve this by lightening, or taking away, some unnecessarily prescriptive requirements, such as the need to publish evidence of analysis or the need to publish details of engagement.

28. We are keen to get the balance right between appropriate regulation to help meet the equality duty and public bodies being held to account by the public and users for their record on improving equality.

29. Following the conclusion of this process of seeking views on the new draft regulations, the Government will consider the responses received and whether any changes to the regulations at page 8 of this document are necessary. It will then lay draft regulations before Parliament for approval by resolution of each House.

EXPLANATORY NOTE

(This note is not part of the Regulations)

These Regulations impose duties on public authorities listed in the Schedule to these Regulations. The purpose of the duties is to ensure better performance by the public authorities concerned of their duty to have due regard to the matters set out in section 149(1) of the Equality Act 2010 (c. 15) (“the Act”).

Regulation 2 requires public authorities listed in the Schedule to prepare and publish one or more objectives they think they should achieve to do any of the things mentioned in paragraphs (a) to (c) of subsection (1) of section 149 of the Act not later than 6th April 2012 and subsequently at intervals of not greater than four years beginning with the date of last publication.

Regulation 3 requires public authorities listed in the Schedule to publish information demonstrating their compliance with the duty imposed by section 149(1) of the Act not later than 31st December 2011 and subsequently at intervals of not greater than one year beginning with the date of last publication.

Regulation 4 allows the information to be published as part of another document and requires that the information must be published in such a manner that the information is accessible to the public.

The instrument has no impact on the costs of business, charities or voluntary bodies. A full impact assessment of the effect that this instrument will have on the costs of the public sector is available from www.equalities.gov.uk and is published along with the Explanatory Memorandum on www.legislation.gov.uk.
