Background

The National Maritime Museum at Greenwich is the largest maritime museum in the world and it includes the Queen's House, the Royal Observatory, Greenwich as well as operating the Cutty Sark. The Museum is open 362 days a year and in 2011–12 it welcomed over 1.8 million visits from Britain and around the world.

The Museum receives funding from the taxpayer via Grant-in-Aid through the Department for Culture Media and Sport, with additional income derived from trading activity, donations and sponsorship.

In 2011–12, it had an annual income of some £32 million and a staff of 439 full time equivalents, under the Board of Trustees, the Director, and an Executive. They uphold diversity and equal opportunities for all.

The Museum is unique in the architectural significance and setting of its main buildings. The 17th-century Queen's House, designed by Inigo Jones and probably the most important early classical building in England, is the keystone of the historic 'park and place' landscape of maritime Greenwich, which was designated a UNESCO World Heritage Site (WHS) in 1997. Flamsteed House (1675-76), the original part of the Royal Observatory, was designed by Sir Christopher Wren and was the first purpose-built scientific research facility in Britain.

In 2012 the Museum sits alongside the London Games' equestrian venue and at the heart of the special atmosphere and activity generated by the Olympics. It has also been pleased to mark Her Majesty The Queen's Diamond Jubilee year with Royal River: Power, Pageantry and the Thames, a special exhibition reflecting the many connections between the British Royal Family and London's river.

Trustees of the National Maritime Museum are unpaid but reasonable expenses are reimbursed. Appointments are made on merit and political activity plays no part in the selection process. However, in accordance with the original Nolan recommendations, there is a requirement for political activity in the United Kingdom in the past five years (if any declared) to be made public. Sir Robert, Mrs Hutchinson and Mr Macdonald have declared no such political activity.
